

---

geological formations of the Highlands are the raised beaches, river-terraces, lake-deposits, peat-mosses, and other accumulations, which are related to the present configuration of the country, and contain remains of the plants and animals still living on its surface.