

FIG. 48.—View of the south side of Staffa, showing the bedded and columnar structure of the basalt. The rock in which the cave to the left hand has been eroded is a volcanic tuff underlying the basalt; to the right is Fingal's Cave. These caverns bear witness to the enormous erosive power of the Atlantic breakers.